Attempt all the questions.

1. Read the following poem and answer the questions given below. 5

Whose woods these are I think I know
His house is in the village though
He will not see me stopping here
To watch his woods fill up with snow.
My little horse must think it queer
To stop without a farmhouse near
Between the woods and frozen lake
The darkest evening of the year.
He gives the harness bell a shake
To ask there is some mistake.
the only other sound's the weep
of easy wind and downy flake
The woods are lovely , dark and deep ,
But I have promise to keep ,
And miles to go before I sleep
And miles to go before I sleep .

A. Answer the following questions .

- a. What was the weather like that evening ?
- b. What does 'before I sleep' suggest ?
- c. How was the forest?
- d. What are woods filled up with ?
- e. What has the poet promised?

One thing that sets human apart from other members of the animal kingdom is our propensity to develop customs and traditions around everything from beauty rituals to death customs .In fact humans love doing this so much that the world has been enriched with thousands of different cultures since the dawn of civilization . No doubt , one important aspect of just about any given culture is its code of etiquette and a sense of identity . Here are some astonishing customs from around the world .

Pointing with lips

While gestures of the hand are often subject to customary variation across cultures , few can claim this wonder extends to expressions of mouth .In Nicaragua , it is common to point with the lips instead of the thumb or index finger like the majority of the world. Wondering just how exactly a person points with their lips it all starts by puckering up . The lip point is typically used in conversation to indicate something that is happening nearby.

Tipping

Another odd custom associated with the united states is its tipping culture. Unlike other countries that don't tip at all or who only tip in small amounts when the food was particularly good, tipping is rather mandatory at most restaurants in the US In fact , it is expected that patrons leave between 10-20 percent of all the bill in tips . Furthur , there are rules for tipping bartenders , delivery people and other service personnel . while some criticize this practice as irrational , there's no doubt that tipping culture in the US gives an incentive for waitresses to provide better service.

Slurping

Most societies around the world have rules about table etiquette. for western cultures , noisily consuming food is considered rude . In japan , however , making slurping sounds while eating has an entirely different meaning . This might have something to do with the fact that in western countries , noodles are properly consumed by twirling them on a spoon before Putting them in the mouth . Meanwhile , the japanese simply slurp up their noodles without contorting them first , an act that is naturally noisier than the former . Making slurping sounds when eating noodles in japan is a way of indicating that you're really enjoying them . some scientists even argue slurping invites air into the palate and actually enhances the noodles flavor.

Kneeling or lying prostrate as greeting

For member of the Yoruba people , an ethnic group that largely resides in Nigeria , greeting rituals are taken quite seriously . This is especially true in regards to greeting elders . When an adult approaches Yoruba youths are expected to drop to their knees in greeting . More specifically women Kneel when greeting and men typically lie prostrate . These gesture are a sign of respect and deference for the elders of the community . Interestingly , this custom is one that distinguishes Yoruba peoples from other groups in Nigeria, Including the Bini and the Kalabari .
